Legal-pede tidbits for those going to DCposted 2 days ago by Yippie-Ki-Yay +36 / -0

1. If you are being arrested, that is NOT the time to fight. If you're being arrested, you're being arrested. That is not the time to get violent or defensive as it will not help you to not be arrested. The "fight" is in the courtroom.
2. You have the right to remain silent. EXERCISE IT. One of the strongest things someone can do for themselves is to state affirmatively that "I am exercising my right to remain silent." I can't emphasize this point enough. I have seen so many individuals who were arrested and then implicated themselves for further or worse crimes because they felt obligated to give information or because they word-vomited. The police are not your friend. You do not have to give explanations, you do not have to give excuses, and you do not have to prove your innocence. They might be the nicest cop you've ever met, but they are still arresting you and the information you give them may still be used against you. Even if you assert your right to remain silent, you may subsequently be asked if you would like to discuss the event or circumstances which lead to the arrest. Guess what folks? This can be used against you. This is another opportunity to affirmatively state "I am exercising my right to remain silent."

3. You have the right to an attorney. USE IT. Here's the skinny people and please understand that I say this with love. If you are not an attorney - if you do not practice criminal defense for a living - if you do not practice in that jurisdiction - you probably do not know the best litigation steps to take. A lawyer's job is to ensure the rights of their clients. Defending a client becomes substantially more difficult if the client doesn't know what they are doing. If you are appointed an attorney, don't answer legal questions without your attorney present. Don't sign documents without an attorney present.
4. You don't have to consent to a search. Here's an example: Client is pulled over for a minor traffic violation. Officer casually asks, "Do you mind if I take a quick search of your vehicle?" Client doesn't do drugs, doesn't have weapons, etc., so client isn't worried that the officer will find something illegal in the vehicle and consents to the officer searching the vehicle. What client isn't aware of, is that when he gave his bestie a ride three weeks ago, his bestie accidentally dropped one of his narcotic pills while in the car and didn't notice. When officer searches the car, he finds the pill. Client is then arrested for possession of a narcotic. It happens. Even if you do not consent to a search, a search may still occur.
5. Know your weapons Make sure you know what weapons you are permitted to have and what the parameters are on those weapons. For example, in certain jurisdictions, you can have a knife on your person, but it can only be a certain length. If the knife exceeds that length, it may be illegal in that jurisdiction. Same with stun guns, tasers, etc.

Well I'm pretty sure that fighting an assault charge doesn't happen at Costco these days.

Hmm, makes you think how many joggers would still be alive if they followed this advice and didn't start playing the "cops are out ta get meh" card. 🤔

Even for those of us who will not be in Washington this week, these might be good guidelines to keep in mind over the next few weeks/months depending on how things shake out.
